

SliceMaster.net Officially Launches Skill-Based Web Version of Slice Master

SliceMaster.net, a rising independent web game studio, is proud to announce the official release of Slice Master, a fully interactive slicing game built specifically for browser play. The game is hosted exclusively at <https://slicemaster.net>, positioning the team as the developer and publisher of the original web-based version of the Slice Master game.

“Our goal was to reimagine what a slicing game could feel like in real time — responsive, skill-based, and playable instantly,” said the SliceMaster.net Team. “We wanted to move away from idle tapping and create something that feels alive on the screen.”

A Game of Reflex, Not Idleness

Unlike the widely known idle mobile apps with the same name, the Slice Master web version offers a completely different gameplay experience:

-  Real-time slicing with physics-based movement
-  No automation or idle progression – pure skill and reaction
-  Browser-based with no installation required
-  Global leaderboard and unlockable knives

-  Play instantly at: <https://slicemaster.net>

Entity Clarification: Developed by SliceMaster.net

This announcement also serves to officially clarify that the browser edition of Slice Master is developed and maintained by the SliceMaster.net Team, independent of mobile versions created by other studios. The team is based in [Vietnam / Country], with a focus on web-native game development using HTML5 and JavaScript.

To ensure transparency and reinforce ownership, the team has also launched an About Us page detailing the game's origin, design process, and player feedback loop.

Browser Games Are Back – and Faster Than Ever

In an age of heavy app stores and cluttered mobile UIs, Slice Master aims to deliver something clean and instantly accessible. With no downloads, no ads, and no registration needed, players can jump in and start slicing in seconds.
